

This morning my fiddlehead mittens looked like this:

Ten minutes ago they looked like this:

If they dry by tomorrow morning (which is actual possible considering I rolled them in two different towels and the humidity is pretty low) I will have one day and two evenings to knit the linings. Monday is Knit Night and I'm pretty much guaranteed a few hours of solid knitting time but for tomorrow and Tuesday I'll just have to keep my knitting handy and work on it whenever the cats are calm enough to leave me alone. Plain knitting should go a little faster, and be a little easier to pick up and put down, than the colourwork. I'm permitting myself to believe I really can finish these mittens by midnight on the 31st (the knit-a-long deadline).
