

This week I started knitting again for the first time since Maisie arrived (last week I realized I could read books ... my life is so exciting). I was going to be leaving the house and I just feel kind of naked and unprepared without some knitting in my bag. It's a plain vanilla sock - simple, portable, relatively mindless - in some exceptionally springy yarn (here's a better picture of the colour).

I'm in the Tanis Fiber Arts Year in Colour club this year and this was the March shipment. It came with and I briefly considered working the yarn in the matching pattern but decided working charts may be beyond my capabilities at the moment. I've only really worked on it at home - with Maisie sleeping on my chest - but I feel like myself to have it in the diaper bag when we go out.

this beautiful pattern