

This is how Maisie and I look when we head out for a walk. Maisie is secured to my chest in the Moby wrap and my coat (the big one I was wearing at the end of my pregnancy) is done up over her. The shared body heat keeps us both nice and warm so I don't have to put anything extra on her except for her hat. We've walked like this a few times now - downtown or with Rob and Abby - and it's so nice. Both my hands are free if I need them and I don't have to worry about lugging the bucket seat around or finding somewhere to park the stroller. Rob's taken Maisie out like this a few times too. She seems to really enjoy a brisk walk around the trail with Rob and Abby and she looks so cute when they get home with her bright winter rosy cheeks.