

I had today off work and set out with a grand plan to get a bunch of stuff done. I haven't done any vacuuming yet but I have a nice pile of new and renewed clothing for us to wear: two pairs of pants for Rob, one freshly hemmed, the other now sporting a replacement button; two pairs of pants for me, one was super easy, I tried them on and discovered they pretty much fit, the other was taken in just a bit in the back waist; a new pair of green fleecy pants for Maisie; a nighty of mine that no longer has any burst seams; a new tunic or dress for Maisie depending on how long it turns out to be and whether or not she wants to wear pants or tights with it; and a freshly darned pair of socks for me. I decided to get kind of fun with the socks and darned them in contrasting colours. I also did a couple of rounds on a square for my barn raising quilt but didn't think of adding that to my stack. I was really only knitting because Fred had fallen asleep on my lap while I was darning and I didn't want to wake him up.
